ABSTRACT

Culture will always exist as long as there is human life on earth. Culture is developing together with human revolutions. This paper analyzes about culture and also cultural knowledge as one of the effects from not knowing others' culture well. The research is to find out the sixth semester students' ability in answering the questions about British culture since they have taken the British culture and society subject. The methodology used in this research is qualitative. It consists of library research and field research. Library research is conducted to find some relevant theories based on some experts in analyzing the questionnaire. The field research is needed where forty (40) students from two different classes (06PBG and 06PCG) are taking part as the respondents. The data are also in the form of movie transcript, online dictionaries and interview transcript. In order to complete the theory, the writer also interview five British people. The results of the research show that most of the students make a mistake on the questions that discuss events, slang, and cultural knowledge. They also cannot distinguish between British culture and general culture.
